The recent global pandemic has undoubtedly affected human activity across the globe. Pandemic impacts extend to human, social, economic and health aspects of human lives. Statistics shows that millions of people have been infected globally, disrupting economies, and creating new challenges for businesses. Government response to this health crisis include a mix of closing of the workplace, remote working, tracing and testing, and social distancing. These new challenges posed by the pandemic are testing businesses ability to innovate, withstand and recover from difficult conditions. This talk will introduce the effects of this global pandemic and the concept of business resilience.
